NOT SO SWEET

"Now, Johnny," Mrs. Davis was telling her son, "I want you to take these two dollars and get a big box of candy at the candy shop."

"Gee, Mom," asked Johnny, "what's the candy for?"

"I've got to give someone a present," explained Mrs. Davis.

Johnny took the money and was about to walk out the door, when his mother stopped him with:

"Take your little cousin Peter with you, too. He'll enjoy the walk!"

"Oh, no," Johnny murmured to himself, "that little brat will drive me crazy!"

Now, it wasn't that Johnny Davis didn't like his cousin Peter. It was just that that four-year-old imp was . . . well, a four-year-old imp! Peter had been staying with Johnny and his family for quite awhile now, and there wasn't a day that he hadn't brought trouble to poor Johnny. And this was another day . . .

Peter was playing in the back-yard, so there was no problem in finding him. But when Johnny told him he was to take a walk with him . . .

"Why?" asked Peter.

"Because you'll enjoy it," said Johnny.

"Why?" asked Peter.

"You'll have fun," said Johnny.

"Why?" asked Peter.

"Come on!" Johnny answered this time, and he tugged the tyke along without further questions.

"Gimme a piece of candy," Peter finally asked as they were returning home.

"I can't," explained Johnny, "my mother has to give it to someone for a present."

"Just one piece!" said Peter.

"No!" insisted Johnny.

"Yes!" said Peter just as firmly, and quick as a flash, he grabbed the package from under Johnny's arm and dashed down the street.

Johnny made chase, but that little imp could certainly move. Down alleys, through hallways, into houses went Peter — and Peter was leaving a trail behind him . . . a trail of candy!

"Peter," screamed Johnny, "you're dropping all the candy!"

"Still some left!" answered Peter, and he sped onwards.

Finally, there was no place else for Peter to run. He had to give himself up . . . and give up that now candy-less box!

"Gosh, Peter," Johnny told him sternly, "Mom's certainly going to be angry at you for this!"

Peter only said: "I still want a piece of candy!"

No one said anything for the rest of the way. But when they got home, Johnny said to his mother, "Mom, it wasn't my fault that . . ."

His mother interrupted him. "Johnny," she said, "what's happened to all the candy?"

"But, Mom," Johnny started again.

"No, 'but's', young man," she said, "that candy was supposed to be for little Peter for his birthday! Now, you march right back and get him another box!"

Peter grinned. "Guess I'm getting more than ONE piece of candy," he said.

THE SKUNK WHO TRIED NOT TO BE

"Why won't anyone play with me?" asked Sheila fearfully. "Why do you say that, Norman?"

"Because you're a skunk, that's why!" roared Norman, the big old skunk who was Sheila's cousin. "And as soon as folks see us, as soon as they get a look at those big white stripes down our backs, they run away! You'll find out!" he added nastily, and marched off.

Poor little Sheila was left alone . . . and terribly upset. All she could think of was getting rid of the stripe on her back . . . and fast! Near tears, she ran to the river bank and started scooping up the thick black mud just as fast as she could. Then, carefully, she smoothed the mud over her back until the white stripe was completely covered. Now she was all black! The tell-tale streak of white was gone!

Sighing with relief, the little skunk hurried back to the forest. Now, if she could only find a playmate—! But alas, no sooner had she reached a clearing where the sun shone through, then the mud on her back started to dry and cake . . . and fall off! Dried mud has no sticking power, and in a few short minutes, her stripe was exposed again for all the world to see!

Frantic with fear now, Sheila wracked her brain for a solution to the problem. And suddenly, she had an inspiration! If she couldn't be all black, she'd be all white! And that way, the stripe wouldn't be seen either . . . not if she were white all over! She remembered seeing a big bucket of whitewash that some hunter had left standing outside his cabin at the edge of the forest, and it was there she headed now.

No one was around when she reached the cabin, and so she dived head first into the bucket, splashing around in the whitewash till she was completely covered with it. And when at last she climbed out, she was snow white from the tip of her nose to the tip of her tail!

Humming with joy, Sheila skipped back into the forest, sure that now at last her secret was safe. But suddenly, with a clap of thunder, the heavens opened up, and the rain came pouring down! It was a typical summer storm . . . and in three seconds flat, it washed away every last bit of whitewash from Sheila's body! Dazed and heart-broken, the little skunk just stood there, frozen in her tracks.

Then . . . "Hey! Psst! Come on in out of the rain!" called a gay young voice. And Sheila turned to find Penelope Possum beckoning to her from inside a hollow tree trunk.

Hardly daring to believe it was true, Sheila crawled in beside Penelope. "You mean you don't mind my stripe?" she whispered timidly.

"Your stripe?" echoed Penelope. "Who cares about that? I want to get to know you. Otherwise, how can we be friends?"

"Then Cousin Norman was wrong!" cried Sheila joyfully. "It's not what you look like but what you are that counts! Oh, we will be friends, Penelope . . . great friends! You'll see!"

the STRING

"Joey! Hey, Joey!" Billy Bunny shouted as loud as his little voice could shout.

"What's the matter?" asked Joey, "You look terrible!"

"Look, do you see my finger?" said Billy and he stuck out his index-finger so Joey could see.

"Yeah, I see it," said Joey. "But why do you have a string on it?"

"That's just it!" answered Billy. "I don't know why the string is on it!"

"Who do you think you're fooling?" smiled Joey. "There must be a reason for putting a string on your finger!"

"I know there must be a reason!" shouted Billy. "But I just can't remember what it is!"

"Your father's birthday due?" asked Joey.

"No, it's in December."

"Your mother's?"

Billy had to think about that one. He scratched his head, he shuffled on his feet. Finally he said, "Maybe. I don't remember the month. But I know it's on the fifteenth! What's today's date?"

"The fifteenth of June!" said Joey with a big smile.

Billy was convinced. That must be the reason for the string.

"Did you buy your present?"

"Gee, no!" answered Billy. "Of course, that's probably it!" He was all smiles now.

"What are you going to get?" asked Joey.

Billy searched into his pocket and pulled out seventy-five cents. "Lucky I've got my allowance," smiled Billy. "Got any suggestions for a present?"

"How about a new cook book?"

Joey was sure a good thinker. Billy agreed that the cook book would be perfect. So they ran down to Main Street and bought the most beautiful book they could get for seventy-five cents!

Billy thanked Joey again and again, and then he rushed home to bring his mother her birthday present.

He rushed through the door, and was about to say "Happy birthday" to his mother, when...

BANGGGGG!

He slipped to the floor.

"What happened?" shouted Mrs. Bunny.

"I don't know," said Billy, who was bruised all over. Then he looked down and saw it. He had slipped on a yo-yo! "That's where the string came from," said Billy. "It broke, and I forgot to take the string off my finger!"

Billy knew she wouldn't understand. He just picked up the cook book, and gave it to her. "I got you a present," he said.

"Oh, you remembered my birthday!" smiled Mrs. Bunny.

And Billy just sat there and laughed.

The BIG LESSON

Mary Jane Barlowe was the most talented girl in the ballet class. She was also the wealthiest. And together, these two characteristics unfortunately made her the most snobbish girl in the class.

For instance, when Clarissa Trent, who was a very nice child but a very ungraceful dancer, would make a misstep or lose the rhythm, Mary Jane was likely to say loudly, "Some people ought to take up football instead of ballet dancing! It suits their big feet better!" And poor Clarissa would blush to the roots of her hair.

Then there were other times . . . such as those occasions when the dancing school put on its all-student shows . . . when some of the girls couldn't afford special costumes or special ballet slippers. At those times, Mary Jane was wont to exclaim, "The ballet is not for peasants! Anyone who can't dress properly shouldn't be allowed to dance in the show!"

Mary Jane herself always had the leading role in these shows, of course, because she was the best dancer in the whole school. And she always had the most beautiful costumes, because her parents could afford to buy them. "It really gets rather monotonous," she'd say in a bored, superior tone of voice, "having the lead all the time! It might be exciting to have a little competition once in a while!"

Little did she dream that the day would come when she would have competition . . . of a sort she could never have foretold. The doctors called it a virus . . . and it kept Mary Jane out of dancing school for three whole weeks. She was a pretty sick little girl during those weeks, and by the time she was better, her ballet class had gotten way ahead of her. The virus had competed against her own natural talent . . . and the talent had lost. It was time for the big annual Christmas show at school, and Mary Jane had missed so many lessons that she couldn't even try out for the chorus, much less for the leading role.

She was heartsick about it, too. For, despite her selfish snobbery, Mary Jane truly loved the ballet, and she was afraid she'd never catch up. And then one day, Clarissa came to see her. "I—I'm not a very good dancer," Clarissa said hesitantly, "but if you'd like me to, I could try to show you what we learned when you were absent. Then maybe you could still get the lead . . ."

"You'd do that for me?" interrupted Mary Jane incredulously. "After all the mean things I've said to you? Oh, Clarissa . . . "

One by one they came after that . . . girls whom Mary Jane had ridiculed, criticized, humiliated. They came to teach her, to help her, to lend her from their own slender stores any costumes or slippers she might need. "I don't deserve it!" Mary Jane wept over and over! "I've been so wrong, so blind!"

It was a great lesson, and Mary Jane learned it well. And on the night of the Christmas show, she did dance in the chorus after all, truly one of the girls . . . in heart and spirit . . . for the first time!
